As a precious old saying goes “knowledge is a treasure, but practice is the key to it”, this proverb is really a golden rule in the pursuit of knowledge. It exactly reminds everyone of the significance of hard work and diligent effort.

Primarily, practice is vital in scientific research. For example, Thomas Edison experienced thousands of failures when seeking for appropriate material of electric light, it's obvious that enduring efforts, together with inspiration, made the way to success. It's a strange phenomenon that people today tend to show respect to his knowledge and achievements, not to his practice.

Moreover, practice plays the key role when learning new knowledge. It means that if students read something from textbooks or listen to the teachings of their tutors, yet neglect assignments, however he can comprehend the knowledge soon, he is likely to forget it within a short span of time, because practice give access to remembrance.

From my point of view, practice leads to true knowledge and knowledge in turn guides practice, numerous examples have proved this principle. Consequently, practice is the key to acquiring knowledge.

题目: If you cannot do great things. Do small things in a great way

【北京新东方金凌虹老师】

As a common saying goes, "If you cannot do great things. Do small things in a great way." We can interpret the saying as follows: If you desire to achieve success, it is not the things (whether great or not) that matter, it is the way you deal with them that matters. Try to do small things in a patient and great way, then you will grab the chance of doing great things and success will not be far away.

Quite a few examples can be listed to prove the point above, one of the cogent cases, which occurs to me instantly, is <sup>most</sup> Jeremy Lin. He was once deemed unsuitable for playing basketball. Let alone achieving success in NBA. Substitute as he was, he never stop trying and kept on practicing hard. Fortunately, success only belongs to those who can do small things perfectly. He made it finally and his success was not a flash in the pan. To take another evidence which is more convincing and rational, statistics released by a world-renowned finance journal have shown that 94% of CEOs or founders of corporation started their career as a salesman who perfectly completed their sales targets and then did "great things".

Hence, at no time should we overlook the way we do small things. There is nothing like the small things, but the one who treat small things casually. Think small, do great!
