As a 22-year-old man, 71 I was sitting on my mom's sofa and waiting for the pain in my back to ease. A lack of work and money forced my wife, our baby boy and me to live with my parents. We slept in my old bedroom and I was feeling down.

72 Thankfully, I had one new job: helping my son learn how to walk. Anytime he took a few steps, however, he would fall down and cry. I had to bend over and hold his hand while he walked along. 74 But my back didn't handle it too well. As I sat there with my eyes closed, I suddenly heard my mother whisper “Joe look!” 73 I opened my eyes and watched my son grab the coffee table, pull himself up and smile. Next with a giggle, he started walking around it. Keeping his hands on it for balance. Finally, when he reached the end of it, he took two big steps and made it to the wall. Then he started walking along the hall with his hands balancing on the wall the whole way, I laughed and cheered. Suddenly, being unemployed wasn't so bad, because my boy had learned to walk.

Learning to love in this world is a lot like first learning to walk. We often fall and cry. However, as long as we try again, we will find our own feet and know how to love.
