The International Friendship Camp began in the USA in 1967. It aims to help world peace by giving teenagers from different countries a chance to make friends.

Last year, the International Friendship Camp was held in Beijing. About 50 teenagers from around the world stayed with local families for two weeks. They had a great time. Antonio from Italy said, "I didn't expect Chinese teenagers to be so friendly. I thought they would be serious and hard-working, because they have a lot of exams. However, they are active and outgoing. They are similar to Italian teenagers." Shirley from Canada said, "Some members of my host family can't speak English but we have still become good friends. They are kind and generous."

Last Wednesday, Mr. Black took his students to the Space Museum. First, the students saw a film about space travel. They saw how the spaceship took off into space and landed on the earth again. It was very exciting and the students felt they were traveling in space themselves.

After the film, Mr. Black took them to see some models of rockets. Though the models were smaller, they showed what the real rockets looked like and how they worked. And then the students saw some moon rocks. Two Americans landed on the moon in 1969, and they put up an American flag there. And then they took them back to the earth.

Before the students left, they also watched a video about life in a space lab. The people could stay in the space lab for months.

One Possible Version:

Should music be played between classes?

This morning the students in my class had a discussion about whether music should be played between classes.

Some think listening to music between classes is a good idea. Music can make them happy and relaxed. Music can make their break time colorful. However, others are against the idea. They think music may have a bad influence because some noisy music may make the students too excited to take a break. In my opinion, it's good to play some soft and peaceful music instead of loud noisy music during the class break. In this way, students can enjoy music as well as having a good rest. Besides, I suggest playing music that is suitable for middle school students.
