Conventional wisdom says that "The best preparation for tomorrow is doing our best today." Simple as the saying is, its intended meaning proves to be profound in contemporary society. Admittedly, great importance should be attached to the efforts we are supposed to make for the time being.

Examples could be added to support this view. For instance, anyone, who has toiled through standardized tests, will testify that what we have spared no efforts to achieve every single day matters simply because scores gotten are always positively correlated with the amount of our preparation. Similarly, it is doing every citizen's utmost to devote ourselves to the fight of the epidemics everyday that eventually contributes to the success in this struggle. As a matter of fact, the only thing we could count on is due self-assurance and hard work to keep ourselves powerful to weather bad times.

For my part, against the background of globalization and the fierce competition both at home and abroad, it is every individual's duty to enhance their awareness and take immediate actions to strive for the highest standards. Surely, only by taking great efforts today can we lay a solid foundation for tomorrow.
