Who is the greatest architect (建筑师) in the animal kingdom? The answer is the beavers(河狸). Beavers are very good at building their homes.

Beavers have large teeth. Their upper incisors (门牙) are about 20 to 25 mm long, according to Live Science. They continue to grow throughout a beaver's lifetime. To keep their teeth sharp, beavers have to bite and break tree branches, which they also use to build their houses.

Their houses look like domes (圆顶状). They usually build their houses in the middle of rivers, with just one underwater entrance.

They also use branches, trees and mud to make dams (大坝). The world's largest beaver dam is 850 meters long and located at the edge of a lake in northern Alberta. Scientists used a satellite (卫星) to take a picture of it in 2007. They believe several generations (几代) of beavers have been working on this dam since the 1970s.

Beavers' dams can help to form wetlands, which can create a nice environment for other animals. They can also purify (净化) water by using their dams to stop some dirt from entering downstream.
