One possible version:

I sometimes use these Apps to search for answers, especially when I come across difficult problems or I have too much homework.

It's normal for students to use them in study. For myself, it brings not only some help but also some trouble. My teachers and parents may feel worried about it for some answers on these Apps are not correct, which may mislead me. What's more, depending on the Apps causes the loss of the ability to think independently. Someone even copies the answers without thinking. However, seeking ideas for solving problems on Apps also brings me benefits. If some problems puzzle me while teachers and parents are not here, Apps may help me efficiently. At the same time, I can also learn some new methods of solving problems.

Every coin has its two sides. We should learn self-management. Besides, before using the Apps, group discussion or asking teachers for help is also a good way to study. Only when these Apps are used correctly and properly can they be useful tools.
