One possible version:

Looking back to my 14-year life, the most impressive lesson I have learnt is to be independent in times of difficulties.

As is known to all, schoolwork almost takes up most of Chinese students' time. Of course, I am also one of them. For this reason, my parents helped me solve all the difficulties in my life, including taking care of my daily life, or even arguments with friends. So personally, I think all I need to do was to work hard in study. However, one accidental event completely changed my idea. One day, on my way to school, I left my schoolbag in the bus. What came into my mind was to call up my parents to help me. Unluckily, they were both having a meeting and didn't answer the phone. Then I realized I had to depend on myself to find the bag. After communicating with the bus station workers and waiting for around one hour, I succeeded in getting my schoolbag back. At that moment, I found it not so hard to get over difficulties on my own.

Instead of studying all the time, we teenagers should pay more attention to developing the independence. Sometimes, after getting into the real society, the ability to solve problems independently is more important to us.
